Roger Fields House
Upper Hill
Private

c. 1900

The Roger Fields house, named for a former owner, repeats a common architectural form for the historic black community of Upper Hill. The two-story, side hall/parlor frame house, dating to the turn of the twentieth century, displays features characteristic of the period. Plain weatherboards, now covered with asbestos shingles, clad the structure and two-over-two sash windows light the first and second floors. Typically, the steeply pitched gable roof is pierced by a narrow brick stove chimney, which rises against the interior hall partition. The single-pile frame structure is extended to the rear by a single-story kitchen wing that dates from the early twentieth century as well. Although abandoned and somewhat deteriorated, the house is one of several dozen structures that contribute to the turn of the twentieth century character of Upper Hill.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Roger Fields house stands on the south side of Jim Moore Road a hundred yards west of the intersection with Upper Hill Road in the historic black community of Upper Hill, Somerset County, Maryland. The two-story, two-bay frame house faces north with the gable roof oriented on an east/west axis.

Estimated to date around 1900-1910, this two-story, side hall/parlor frame house is supported on brick pier foundation, and the exterior is clad with a layer of asbestos shingles over plain weatherboards. The steeply pitched gable roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Attached to the back of the single-pile main block is a single-story kitchen wing.

The north (main) elevation is a two-bay facade with a side entrance and flanking two-over-two sash window. The door is partially glazed. A pair of two-over-two sash windows light the second floor. The base of the gable roof is finished with a boxed cornice. Rising through the gable roof is an interior brick chimney stack that rises against the hall partition.

The east and west gable ends are alike with single two-over-two sash windows lighting the first and second floors. A small two-pane window marks the upper gable end to illuminate the attic. The end of the roof is finished with an extended eaves and boxed soffits.

The single story kitchen wing covers a portion of the south wall of the main block, and kitchen is extended by a shed roofed addition. An interior brick stove chimney rises through the gable end.

The interior was not seen.
